

Carlos Mario Foradori

Dr. Carlos Foradori has been Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs of Argentina and G-20 Sherpa since December 2015 prior to his current position as Permanent Representative of Argentina to the International Organizations in Geneva.

He is a lawyer. He also received his PhD in Political Science from Universidad del Salvador, Argentina, where he also completed a Masters degree in International Relations with honors. He completed his Masters degree in Public Administration from Harvard University, and his Masters degree in International Public Policy from Johns Hopkins University, Washington D.C. Dr. Foradori has a postgraduate degree on “Negotiation and International Conflict Resolution” from Temple University, Philadelphia.

He joined the Foreign Service and graduated from the Foreign Service Institute with honors. He held many positions at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Argentina, among others, he was Political Counselor at the Embassy of Argentina in Washington for many years. He held different positions at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and he served as Ambassador of Argentina in Zimbabwe and Guatemala.

Before being appointed as Vice Minister, he was assigned to different posts at the Ministry of Foreign Relations, among others, Director of the Department of Federal and Electoral Affairs, Director General of Foreign Trade Strategies, Chief of Cabinet of the Secretariat of Institutional Relations and member of Cabinet of the Vice Minister.

He was the Chief negotiator in the negotiations that led to the agreement on the last border dispute with the Republic of Chile on the Continental Glaciers in 1998. He also headed the “Working Group on the Question of the Malvinas Islands” that led to the Communications Agreement between the United Kingdom and Argentina in 1999. He was Chairman of the States Platform of the International Strategy for Disaster Risk of the United Nations (ISDR), and a member of the “Panel of Governmental Experts on the Issue of Missiles in all its Aspects” that advise the Secretary General of the United Nations.

Ambassador Foradori was also Professor of “History of Political Theory” at the University of Salvador in Buenos Aires, and Professor of “International Public Law” at the Faculty of Law of the University of Buenos Aires.

He published, among other works, “Political Poverty and the New Paradigm in Argentina” (Grupo Editor Latinoamericano, Buenos Aires, 1993) and a Chapter on “International Boundary” in the new “Manual of Public International Law” published by editorial "La Ley" in 2012.